

Kai Po Che

Kai Po Che is a traditional outdoor game played during festivals in Gujarat, India. Players fly kites and try to cut the strings of their opponents' kites using skill, timing, and strategy. When someone succeeds, they shout "Kai Po Che!" to celebrate victory. The game tests control, agility, and competitive spirit, and is enjoyed as a festive sport by teams and individuals..

General Rules

1. All participants must use standard-sized kites and safe cotton/silk strings.
2. Each player launches their kite at the start signal.
3. The objective is to maneuver your kite to cut opponents' strings by skillful pulling and releasing.
4. Once a kite is cut, the player who caused it shouts "Kai Po Che!" to claim victory.
5. Hands or external tools cannot be used to interfere with another kite directly—only aerial battles count.
6. If a kite falls due to string breakage, the flyer is considered out of that round.
7. In case of disputes, the referee's decision is final

Competition Rulebook

1. Each round lasts 10 minutes or until a majority of kites are cut.
2. Winners are determined by the number of successful cuts or by being the last kite flying.
3. Multiple rounds are held until the finalists are selected.
4. The top 3 flyers in the final round will be awarded.
5. A cut is valid only if the opponent's kite string is severed in flight, not if it falls due to wind or mishandling.
6. Fair play is mandatory—any foul methods (like sticking substances to strings or using banned materials) lead to disqualification.
